We could not see any picture at all on any Sky channel last night but we did record on sky plus and when that recording was replayed this morning it had recorded perfectly.. Can I get a service manual or schematic for this model or can anyone help diagnose the problem from this description? Posted on Tuesday, January 31, 2006 - 18:22 GMTCE28WN3-B Sanyo TV When the temperature drops outside my house to below zero my TV cannot cope with Sky.. It is a 2001 model When I turned it on it worked fine but then all the red colours left making for a blue green yellowish colour.. It was -5 outside last night and we have really good heating in the house so can anyone shed any light on this.

Somehow,he managed to turn it on (after trying 20 -30 times), and said not to turn it off in the tv only in the remote (leave it in standby).. The scen went black with only one thin line in the middle of the screen I called customer support but they were closed for the weekend.. Anyhow, any information on how to fix it, a service manual, or diagram would be awesome. Free Index Card Software For Mac

Depending what set it is, I've send it to repair, but the guy said it was too expensive to repair it, and that he had changed the power source, but the problem persists.. I always thought this was the fault of the dish but we are now running SKY+ and have the old sky box linked up to another tv in another room and that runs fine, no matter what temperature, so that knocks the 'dish' theory on the head.. ' My husband thinks it was caused from being left on too long' I don't tend to think so because it had only been on for about an hour when it happened..
